Obviously, each horizontal inch of milk must contribute its proportion to a sample thus automatically taken, and even though the milk is not stirred, since all the cream clots are broken, the results are accurate. Their correctness has been shown by hundreds of experiments, some made by experiment stations in this and other states, and some by creameries. I freely admit that accurate samples may be taken in other ways, but I claim that there is less likelihood of error by the use of this method, and that it is greatly to be preferred to the usual insufficient stirring and dipping. 2. Correct Apparatus. The management should be able to assert that every piece of apparatus used in its dividend-making is accurate. Presumably the creamery scales and their weights have been tested by the sealer of weights and measures. The accuracy of the quality measure is quite as important as is that of the quantity measure. In the absence of a state law compelling managers of creameries and cheese factories to use certified glassware only, the best that I can advise is that they take advantage of the offer of the experiment station, which has stood for many years, to certify without charge all correct glassware sent them by citizens of the state. The only expense to the management is that of express charges. A great...
