Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .wet with the strange black ink, that our missionary said they had better carry their sheets of paper out doors, and hang them up to dry at recess time, while they ate their rice. After recess they had their arithmetic class, and used a soraban, which is a counting machine made of a frame with wires stretched across it, and beads strung on the wires. Even clerks in the banks and in the stores do all their counting on sorabans. There was a story hour in school, too, with stories and pictures about what Jesus did when He was here among men. Altogether that first day at school was very wonderful to them, and they went home just full of things to tell their mother. It was a little disappointing to find that there was a caller visiting them, a lady who was Mrs. Cherry Blossom, whom I first told you about way over in New York City. She had come back to Japan, with many wonderful stories of America and of our church for Japanese people in New York City. We go to church now, too! said Chrysanthemum, watching Mrs. Cherry Blossom drinking her tea and wrapping up all the little cakes she could not eat then, to take home with her. That is the polite thing to do in Japan, of course. Then Mrs. Cherry Blossom said exactly what you and I are thinking: that it really doesn't matter at all how...
