A good deal of media attention directed toward the District of Columbia s emergency response system has centered around the emergency ambulance service (911). On August 5, 1987, the Fiscal Affairs and Health Subcommittee held an oversight hearing on Emergency Ambulance Service and 911. Testimony was received from Members of the U.S. House of Representatives and city officials of the District of Columbia. In considering the question of the quality and the efficiency of the emergency response system in the District of Columbia, the subcommittee made every attempt to determine whether or not the District of Columbia s emergency system is different from or burdened by problems not found in other jurisdictions.
